

Real-time, in-match markets for football.

Markets.Futbol turns a live match into a running series of short-dated markets. A grid of zones is laid over the pitch, every zone is its own market, and participants take positions on where play goes next while the match is still being played.

Currently invite-only.

01

The pitch is a grid of markets

A grid of zones is laid over the pitch and every zone is its own market. Adjacent zones can be combined into a single combo position, so a read on how an attack develops is expressed in one action.

02

Markets resolve inside the match

Contracts open and resolve continuously while the match runs, not once at full time. A position taken in the twelfth minute is resolved in the twelfth minute.

03

It rewards reading the game

What moves a position is what is actually happening on the pitch: possession, shape, where the ball has already been, which side is building and which is sitting deep.

04

Participants trade against each other

There is no operator on the other side of your position. Participants trade against one another in a shared pool, and Markets.Futbol operates the market rather than taking a position in it.
